

词汇: disappointment 失望

- 1 We've all been there. Ending up with a worse exam result than you had hoped for or expected, a friend cancelling a plan you were really looking forward to, or your favourite sports team losing a game. Disappointment is an unhappy feeling when there is a gap between your expectations and reality, when something you desired failed to materialise. It's a normal and natural reaction, but what to do? Is it best to forget about it and move on, or allow yourself to feel the feels?
- 2 We often can't control what happens in life, but we can control how we respond when things don't go our way. Dr Radha Modgil, a UK family doctor and campaigner for wellbeing, says that we should take time to process the disappointment. "We can often feel the need to move on straight away or ignore our feelings, but if we take time to process them and talk them through, we can move forward in a healthier way," she says. Next, she advises us to see the opportunities. Things may not have worked out this time, but when one door closes, a different, more exciting door may have opened, in a way that may one day make you grateful for the initial disappointment.
- 3 The wider the gap between expectations and reality, the greater the disappointment. Make sure your goals are realistic, not idealistic, says Dr Annette Clancy, an organisational consultant who researches emotions in the workplace. Think about what a realistic result would be, rather than the perfect one. When waiting for something significant like a job offer or test result, her advice is to not get ahead of yourself. When we anticipate a positive result, we often start imagining a future that doesn't yet exist, and if that future doesn't materialise, we then have to grieve its loss, which can be upsetting.
- 4 Try not to take it personally. Disappointment might make you think, "I'm not good enough," and lead you to blame yourself, affecting your self-esteem. It may cause you to blame others, making you angry that they did not recognise your value. Dr Annette Clancy says both reactions miss the point. Instead, see disappointment as a signal that our expectations and reality are not aligned. Understanding this, she says, can be an important way to develop resilience.

测验与练习

一、将标题和段落配对。

Paragraph 1 _____

Paragraph 2 _____

Paragraph 3 _____

Paragraph 4 _____

Paragraph 5 _____

- a. Pause and reflect on the disappointment
- b. Avoiding taking risks to avoid disappointment
- c. What is disappointment?
- d. Manage expectations, manage disappointment
- e. Success can lead to future disappointment
- f. Don't blame yourself or others

二、根据文章内容选出正确的选项。

1. What does 'it' refer to in the following question? It's a normal and natural reaction, but what to do?
 - a. disappointment
 - b. failure
 - c. desire
2. When disappointment occurs, we should forget about it and move on.
 - a. True
 - b. False
 - c. Not given
3. We should choose goals that we think are achievable.
 - a. True
 - b. False
 - c. Not given
4. According to Dr Annette Clancy, why can unrealistic expectations make disappointment worse?
 - a. They make people work too hard.
 - b. They create an imagined future that may never happen.
 - c. They make us think we are not good enough.

5. This article recommends avoiding ambitious goals.
- a. True
 - b. False
 - c. Not given

三、用方框中的单词完成对本文的总结。

When things don't go 1) _____ and you feel disappointed, try not to ignore the feelings and move on. Instead, 2) _____ with someone you trust. 3) _____ allows you to process what happened and move on from the disappointment in a healthier way. In the future, make sure that your expectations and reality are roughly 4) _____. That way, if your desires don't 5) _____, the disappointment won't feel so damaging.

your way	materialise	aligned
talk them through		grateful
idealistic		feeling the feels

（答案见词汇表后）

词汇表

be there	经历（某事）
materialise	实现，成为现实
feel the feels	充分感受自己的情绪，直面自己的感受
go (someone's) way	合（某人的）心意
talk (something) through	充分讨论（某事）
work out	成功，顺利进行
grateful	感激的
idealistic	理想化的
get ahead of oneself	想得太远，过早设想未来
grieve	为...悲伤
take (something) personally	往心里去，认为...是针对自己的
miss the point	没有抓住重点，没有领会要旨
aligned	一致的，相符的
resilience	韧性

答案

一、将标题和段落配对。

Paragraph 1 c) What is disappointment?

Paragraph 2 a) Pause and reflect on the disappointment

Paragraph 3 d) Manage expectations, manage disappointment

Paragraph 4 f) Don't blame yourself or others

二、根据文章内容选出正确的选项。

1. a. 'It' refers back to the previous sentence which begins defining by defining disappointment.
2. b. False. *Dr Radha Modgil, a UK family doctor and campaigner for wellbeing, says that we should take time to process the disappointment.
3. a. True. Make sure your goals are realistic, not idealistic, says Dr Annette Clancy, an organisational consultant who researches emotions in the workplace.
4. b. When we anticipate a positive result, we often start imagining a future that doesn't yet exist, and if that future doesn't materialise, we then have to grieve its loss, which can be upsetting.
5. c. Not given. The article recommends avoiding unachievable goals but doesn't mention avoiding ambitious goals.

三、用方框中的单词完成对本文的总结。

When things don't go your way and you feel disappointed, try not to ignore the feelings and move on. Instead, talk them through with someone you trust. Feeling the feels allows you to process what happened and move on from the disappointment in a healthier way. In the future, make sure that your expectations and reality are roughly aligned. That way, if your desires don't materialise, the disappointment won't feel so damaging.